

CREW & SUPPORTERS

The successful rescue of the Painted Desert Trading Post has ensured that this historic landmark will continue to stand for decades, barring acts of God. The Co-Op has since repaired the exterior stucco, restored the window frames, enhanced the ghosted lettering on the outside walls, and made other cosmetic improvements, all with an eye on maintaining its vintage patina.

The beauty of the site and its historical significance create an allure hard to resist. Calls for volunteers never went unanswered.

In spite of the challenge they faced, PDTP crew members maintained a sense of humor.

Workers posed for this photo at day's end following the initial cleanup effort.

Volunteers came from all parts of the U. S. to help with the roof replacement during the second phase.

Adela Windsor, daughter of Dotch Windsor and Joy Nevin, searches her memory during an interview at the trading post in October 2019.

This group journeyed to the trading post in September 2020 to begin stucco repair and complete other chores.
